I.

I, i, the ninth letter of the Latin alphabet, and the third vowel; but in the natural series it stands first, representing the least emphatic of the pure vocables. Hence there is a great tendency to substitute it for the other vowels; and it is very much employed in the inflection and derivation of words, both as a mere connecting vowel and as an euphonic representative of the other vowels. || Interchanges of I with the other vowels. 1. For those with a and e vide those letters. 2. With o: this occurs chiefly in derived words: e. g. multo, multi-tudo; alto, alti-sonus: there are a few instances in compounds: e. g. from notus come ugnatus, cognatus; from loco, illico: so the orig. forms olus, illic, became ille, illic. 3. With u: in derived words: e. g. arcu, arc-tenuis; aestu-, aesti-fer; famul, famula. Many words which orig. were spelt with u subsequently had i: e. g. all superlatives, as maximus for maximus; so finitimus, finitimus; lacrima, lacrima. In inflection the dat. and abl. plu. of the 4th decl. orig. had u, as fructibus; but afterwards gen. i, fructibus. 4. On the connection of i with j and y, vide those letters. || Changes of I in the Romance languages: 1. i long generally remains unchanged, but it is sometimes changed into e and o: e. g. Lat. frigidus; It. freddo; Fr. froid.

2. i short is generally changed into e, except in French: e. g. Lat. bibere; It. bere. In French the usual change is into oi: e. g. Lat. bibere, digitus, fides, minus, niger; Fr. boire, doigt, foi, moins, noir. 3. i long by position is changed to nearly the same changes as i short, being usually changed into e: e. g. Lat. virga; It. Sp. and Port. verga; Fr. verge. But i followed by ng generally becomes ei, and sometimes ai and a in French: e. g. Lat. pingere, dignari, lingua; Fr. peindre, daigner, langue. Both i short and i long by position frequently remain unchanged.

is, ōis, id. (dat. et, Pl.: si monosyllabae, Cat. Plur. et, eis, for it, is, freq. in MSS. and Inscr.: hi and his

are also common: Caes.: dat. and abl. libus and ibus, Pl. It is rendered emphatic by the suffix psc. id.) pron. (prop. used only with reference to some word or clause, not, like the demonstratives, to direct attention to a thing: hence it is sometimes called a logical pronoun). 1. In connection with substantives: this or that: is locus, Caes.: ea res, Id.: id flumen, Id. 2. As a pronoun, it is usu. of the third person: he, she, it: venit mihi obviam tūc puer: is mihi litteras ab te reddidit, Cic.: Myrtil ab ea (i. e. Glycerio) egreditur, Ter.: flumen est Arar: id Helvetii transibant, Caes. When rendered emphatic by et, the enclitic que, or by its position, it sometimes enhances a preceding statement: a te vero bis ter summm, et eas perbebras litteras accipi, Cic.: Antonius cum una legione eaque vacillante, id.: certa flagitilla merces, nec ea parva, Id. (2) Of the first pers.: haec omnia is feci, qui sodalis Dolabellae eram, Id. (3) Of the second pers.: qui magister equitum fuisse tibi viderere, is per municipia curruisti, Id. 2. It is very freq. used without reference to any expressed substantive, being defined by a relative clause: ea quae ad effeminandos animos peritunt important, Caes. 3. When it would be in the same case as the relative it is usually omitted: tertium tertian incolunt qui ipsorum lingua Celtas appellantur, Id. But when the relative clause comes first, it is sometimes employed for the sake of emphasis: male se res habet cum, quod virtute effici debet, id tentatur pecunia, Cic. Sometimes also it is used along with a relative pronoun for the same purpose: quorum eorum ope, Liv. Exp. with quod: alive ille hoc ingenio potuisset, alive, id quod constaret, Platonis studiosus audiendi fuisset, Cic. 3. In the neut. freq. used as a subst.: and hence sometimes with gen.: quando verba vana ad id locum fuerint, rebus standum esse, hitherto, till now, Liv.: id aetatis, at that age, Cic.: hence, id, therefore, on that account: id ego gaudeo, Id. In eo est, it is gone so far, is, at that pass: cum jam in eo esset, ut in muros evaderet milles, Liv. In eo est also means, it consists in that, depends upon that: totum in eo est theatrorum, ut sit concinnum, Cic. Ex eo, from that, hence: sed tamen ex eo, quod eam voluptatem videtur ampliare saepe vehementius, Id. Cum eo, with the condition or stipulation: Liv. 4. Sometimes it refers to the follg. substantive, instead of to that which precedes: quae pars major erit, eo stabitur consilio (for ejus), Id. 5. Such, of such a sort, character, or quality: in eum res redit jam locum, at sit necessum, Ter.: neque tu is es, qui, quid sis, nescias, Cic.

An old form of the gen. istius, Pl.: dat. fam. istae, Id.) pron. demonstr. of the second person [is tu]: that of yours, that near you: hence in letters it refers to the person to whom the letter is addressed; and in speeches, it frequently stands for the person against whom the orator is speaking; hence when that person is represented by an advocate, it may often be translated by your client: and in gen. that, this: quid quod adventu tuo ista subellia vacuascent, those seats where you are sitting, Cic.: iste vir optimus (ironically), Id. With other pronouns: acio ista haec facia, probe ut proloquor, Pl.: istius lapsus in dicendo facultatis, Cic. 2. such, of such a kind: homines ista auctoritate praediti, qua vos estis, Id. 3. From its frequent use in speeches to designate those opposed to the orator, it sometimes conveys an accessory dyslogistic notion: non erit ista amicitia, sed mercataria, Id. (Hence it. questo; Fr. ex. cet.)

istie (isthic), aec, oc, and ac, pron. demonstr. [iste with the suffix ec the same, this]: istae, istic fuit, quem vendidisti? Pl.: istae miseria, Id.: malum istoc, Id. With the suffix ec repeated, and in interrogations with cine: sinecine interminata sum hinc abiens tibi? Ter.

Ita, adv. [in] in this or that manner, as thus: it differs from sic (which comes from hic) in the same way as is differs from hic; but the two adverbs, like the two pronouns, are sometimes interchanged: ita est homo. Ter.: est, iudice, ita ut dicitur, Cic. 2. Ita — ut, or ut — ita, as — also, as well — as: in moribus corporis ut quisque est diffidulus, ita medicus nobilissimus atque optimus quaeritur, id. 3. Frequently before an acc. and inf.: vellim ita statum habere, me tui memoriam cum summa benevolentia tenere, id. 4. Followed by a subj. clause: Ita se meritis esse ut in servitium abduci non deberet, Caes. 5. In interrogations: ita tene censei coronam herbae exstissime semen? Cic. 6. In replies, ay, yes: Menaechemum, opud, te vocari, dixerat. Mc. Ita vero, Pl. 7. In asseverations and oaths: as truly as, so: ita vivam, ut maximos sumptus facio, Cic. 8. Ita — quē, conj. and so, and thus: ita constitui, fortiter esse agendum, itaque feci, Cic. 11. Transf. therefore, for that reason, consequently, accordingly: Itaque rem suscepit et a Sequanis impetravit, Caes.: est itaque id genus tumulum in commutatione verborum, Cic. 12. J.

J, which grammarians have maintained widely different opinions. There is no doubt, however, that it was originally represented by the same symbol as the vowel i: and hence some writers hold that j formed no part of the Latin alphabet, but even they admit that i represented two distinct sounds, That J was a consonant is proved by the fact that when a word ending in a single consonant is followed by one beginning with j, the last syllable of the preceding word is always long by position. As to its sound, the most probable opinion is that it closely resembled the German j or English y (before a vowel). But in England the Latin j is usually pronounced like the same letter in English. The ancient grammarians state that j between two vowels was pronounced double, and hence some authors (as Cicero) rejected it in writing, e. g. ajlo (ajlo), Majla (Majla), pejus (pejus), etc. J occurs only at the beginning of syllables, and is invariably followed by a vowel. 11. Changes of J in Latin.

1. The closest relation exists between j and the vowel i; hence, in the formation and inflection of words, it was very often changed into the latter: e. g. Pompejus, Pompei; Gaius, Gai; jam, etiam, quoniam; ajlo, albam. On the other hand, i was often changed by the poets into j for metrical purposes. e. g. abiete, abietibus, for abiete, abietibus.

2. J is more nearly allied to the gutturals than to any other class of consonants; hence it is sometimes interchanged with g: e. g. from the root mag- (in magnus, magis) comes major.

3. In the compounds of jacio j is sometimes elided, especially in the poets: e. g. abicit, adicit, obicit, for abjicit, adjicit, objicit. 4. On the change of di into j, vide letter D, no. 1. 2. 111. Changes of J in the Romance languages. 1. Into g, gi, or gg: e. g. Lat. Januarius, jam, majus, prae; It. gennaio, già, maggio, paggio (on the gg, v. supra no. 1). 2. Into i: e. g. Lat. majore, bajulare; Fr. maire, bailleur. 3. Into y: e. g. Lat. jam, major; Sp. y, mayor. 4. Into z: e. g. Lat. Juniperus; Sp. rinabro.

5. Into t: e. g. Lat. Julius; Sp. luglio. 6. Omission of j: e. g. Lat. adjutare, it. allare; Fr. aider; Lat. junare; Fr. de jancer. 112. As an abbreviation J. O. M. signifies Jovi Optimo Maximo; J. R. Juno Regina; J. V. T. Julia Victoria Togata.

M.

M, m, the thirteenth letter of the Latin alphabet, resembling in form and sound the Greek Μ; it belongs to the class of liquids or semivowels, and is closely connected with the labial series. The Latin language, unlike the Greek, tolerated a final m; but its sound was faint, and before an initial vowel, even in prose, was scarcely heard. Hence arose the rule of versification respecting the elision of final syllables terminating in m. To this also are owing the forms attigam, dice, ostende, facie, recipie, for attigam, dicam, ostendam, faciam, recipiam; and the forms donec for donicum, coelo, coepto, for con-eo, con-erecto, etc. Initial m cannot be followed by n, as in Greek; hence μῆν became μήνα in Latin. II. Interchange of m with other letters: 1. With n: e. g. eumdem for eumdem; quorundam for quorundam; imbellis for imbellis; imprimis for imprimis; immanis for immanis, etc. So the Latin termination m generally corresponds to the Greek final ν, in the inflections both of nouns and verbs. 2. With b: e. g. hicinus and hibernus; tumens and tuber; glomus and globus. 3. With v: e. g. pro-magnum is prob. another form of promagnum.

III. The only change of M in the Romance languages is into n: e. g. Lat. magnum, It. magno, Sp. magno, Fr. grand. So with the omission of r, sp. m. scilicet, e. g. Lat. scutula, Sp. scutela, Fr. scutelle. 4. When followed by n: e. g. Lat. autumnus, columna; It. autunno, colonna; Fr. automne. 5. Omission of n before n: e. g. Lat. dominus, sonitus; Sp. don, sonido; Port. domo, sono.

IV. As an abbreviation, M, usu. denotes the praenomen Marcus, and less freq. noster, monumentum, municipium; M' denotes the praenomen Manlius. 5. As a numeral, M, standing for CIO, denotes the number 1000.

MACELLARIUS, a, um, adj. [macellum] pertaining to the meat-market or provision-market; taberna, Val. Max.

N.

N is the fourteenth letter of the Latin alphabet, corresponding in form and sound to the Greek Ν. It is one of the liquids or semi-vowels, and is closely allied with the dental mutes. There appears to have been a general tendency in Latin to get rid of the sound of n before s; hence we find sus for snus; mensis for mnensis, etc. This occurs also, but less frequently, before other consonants; e.g. læterna for lænterna; lingula for lingula. So, too, at the end of words, where, indeed, it is very rare; aliqui for alioquin; ceterique for ceteroquin, etc. On the other hand, n is sometimes (as in Greek) inserted before the final gutturals of roots, to make a strengthened form from which the imperfect tenses are derived: e.g. lupus, lup-ⁿ, "touch"; liq-ⁿ, li-n-ⁿ-ge, "have."

|| Interchanges of n with other letters. These are almost wholly confined to its assimilation with, or change into, the other liquids. 1. For its changes with l and m, vide those letters.

2. Before r it is assimilated: e.g. tr-ruo; cor-rumpo. || 3. Changes of n in the Romance languages. These, for the most part, are similar to those which occur in Latin itself. 1.

Initial n undergoes no change. 2. Medial n is changed (1) into l: e. g. Lat. onerum, lt. releno. (II) It is omitted, often with some modification of the accompanying vowels: e. g. Lat. diurnum, furvus, abersum, infernum; Fr. jour, four, hiver, enfer. This takes place especially when n is after i: e. g. Lat. constare, lt. costare, Fr. coster; Lat. mensis, lt. Sp. Port. mesa, Fr. mois. (III) n becomes gn, ã, or ã: e. g. Lat. granivore, lt. granivire, Fr. groyer, Sp. granir, Port. granir.

IV. As an abbreviation, N usually stands for natus, nefastus dies, nepos, etc. N = nations, natus, nostri, nostro, etc., numera, numero, etc. N. L. = nummi domini nostri. N. L. = non liquet (v. liquo). N. M. V. = nobilis memoriae vir. NN. BB. = nobilis.
